ABOUT THE SUMMIT

The 2017 Resilient Cities Summit, the nation's premier resiliency summit for local elected officials, will build upon the success of two prior events in 2015 (view report) and 2016 by convening over 50 leading mayors, city officials and nationally recognized experts to discuss the challenge of building more resilient communities and sharing the solutions that help cities evolve to be stronger, smarter, and more prosperous.

With the mounting uncertainty around the federal commitment to climate change and funding availability for infrastructure, economic development, social services, and more, local leadership has never been more essential. The Summit is a unique opportunity for your organization to engage with policymakers and demonstrate your leadership and expertise. Together, we will continue to identify innovative solutions, share best practices, and develop the cross sectoral partnerships to build more resilient communities.
